Feedback Preparation Grid

1. Micro-Yes • Get buy-in • Reduce mystery	2. Data Point • Focus on behavior, not person • Focus on data, not interpretation • No blur words	3. Impact Statement • Why does this matter? • Who is affected by it?	4. Question • Check if they see it the same • Joint problem solve • Agree to an action plan
EXAMPLE A: Do you have 10 minutes to talk about the meeting we just had?	I noticed that when I proposed an idea, you said "that'll never work."	I mention it because I feel hesitant to share my thinking with you now.	How do you see it? How might we best get our ideas out during meetings?
EXAMPLE B: Can I share some thoughts with you about how we've been working together?	I noticed that you cancelled our last three 1-1s and haven't replied to the questions I sent last week.	I mention it because I'm thinking that you don't find my work important. I may be totally wrong, but I didn't want to keep my assumptions to myself.	What are your thoughts? How do you see it?

© Created by LifeLabs Learning. Need help? Email us at: hello@LifeLabsLearning.com

LIFELABS LEARNING

Thought Generator

Hi there! Go ahead and start filling me in now before the workshop begins!

1. Pick an example:

Think of someone you'd like to give feedback (or someone you didn't get a chance to give feedback in the past). Work-related issues are best, but personal examples are okay too.

Jot down a quick description of the situation. Throughout the workshop, you'll craft your feedback "script" and get feedback on your feedback. You can make it anonymous, but keep it real.

Examples:
"Her tone is creating problems." "He needs to be more proactive." "My manager is demotivating."

2. Do a feedback check:

Who recently gave you feedback?
Write that person's initials here: _____

Can't think of someone quickly? You probably aren't getting enough feedback. We'll talk about this in the workshop.

3. And a random, unrelated task: draw a scene with bunny rabbits here. (Really? Yes!)

© Created by LifeLabs Learning. Need help? Email us at: hello@LifeLabsLearning.com

LIFELABS LEARNING